Combined-Arms Breaching Operations recognition markers indicate the point at which forces begin changing their formation to posture for the passage. This may require widening initial lanes that the assault force created, especially when a dismounted assault is followed by mechanized follow-on forces. Integrate appendices into the chapters. However, the breach force continues to install the necessary markers to improve the lane signature for larger or subsequent follow-on forces maneuvering toward the lane. Understanding breaching theory is the first step to understanding breaching tactics. As the operation progresses, lane marking may be upgraded to include left and drill or SOP rehearsal.
