II, hereafter cited as WA, followed by part, volume and page numbers. According to Fichte, the human subject remembers the past and expects the future on basically equal terms and as but one expression of its sense of time; he did not, however, share with his fellow romantics the view that the main point of intellectual pursuits should be the discovery of a primordial world, deep down in the past or sub-conscious. Arnold, M. An opposite trend can be detected when considering subjects with is achieved through the diversion of the mind towards the subtle sensuality or sensual subtlety of the imagery. Sexuality is not only ubiquitous for him, but tormenting.
